

It has been brought to my attention that a petition to deregulate broadband services has been filed. This is absurd and an example of good old fashioned American greed. I enjoy my ISP's service. I like the fact that I can walk down to their office and talk with someone face to face, if I have a problem or such. Deregulating these services will enable the phone companies to control the broadband market by raising prices or refusing connection for smaller ISP's. This would force people, like me, if they wanted to continue using broadband services, to move to a big company with no face. This will just end up as a repeat of previous deregulation, which benifit the big companies, but not the small ones or the consumers.
